Riparian zones are the areas of land that run along a river.

They play a critical role in the productivity and health of the river, as well as protection for the land beyond. Without healthy riparian zones, riverbanks are prone to erosion, biodiversity is lost, and river health can decrease.

The Department of Aquatic Resources and Fisheries Management will be replanting trees in a cleared riparian zone along River Philip (outside of Oxford) and are looking for community members to join us and help plant!
